D 3.12 Minutes of the meeting of Board of Studies in English held on 10/08/2017Annexure I*Paper: EGO-130*Credits: 01*Writing Lives: An Interactive Literary Series

This course carries forward some of the themes covered in the earlier course on “The Gender of Literatures”. It combines the study of course material with the actual classroom exercise of writing lives. The syllabus would include readings, documentary and cinema. We would look at multiple literary genres – fiction, non-fiction, poetry, drama, pamphlets etc. The syllabus would remain gender-focused but its scope would extend beyond the mere ambit of “Gender Studies” and critique the different ways in which men and women have written lives.

In “writing lives” participants would be encouraged to use course material to sharpen their own offerings. They would work with the instructor to use experience, academic study, “histories”, “geographies” and contexts to produce short written pieces.

Those who register should note that this is NOT a creative writing workshop but a course that would insist on academic rigour and evidence of careful study. Marks would be assigned for evidence of having studied the prescribed material and for participation in classroom discussions.
